From the Principal

I want to thank both students and parents for your hard work and effort to do school in a new way during this unique beginning to the school year. This year brings challenges to all of us that we have never faced before. I know that all Wildcats will be up to the task, and we will have a successful school year. We look forward to seeing students who have chosen to come back to campus, and we will continue to provide quality instruction for those students who will remain with virtual learning.

I encourage students to continue to log in and complete your assignments on a daily basis. Reach out to your teachers through TEAMS or by e-mail to get the help you may need with assignments. Teachers are more than willing to help you however they can.

Remember that the virtues of patience and kindness go a long way when dealing with others during difficult times. Hang in there and remember that we are ALWAYS proud of our Wildcats!

Senior Red Cords

Seniors, to earn your red cord for graduation you must give blood three times in your senior year or have five units donated in your name.

Flu Season

Flu shots are available earlier than usual. Please go to your doctor's office, the local pharmacies or the county health department for this immunization.

This is more important than ever!

Wash Your Hands!

We are a culture that eats many things with our hands. We all love a morning taco, chips and salsa, hamburgers, hotdogs and French fries. You get the idea, so think before you pick up your donut or sandwich and be aware of how important it is to have clean hands.

Stay safe-stay well!

New CTE Building To House New Classes At High School

by Savannah Stephenson

Gregory Portland High School is constructing a new Career and Technical Education (CTE) building, scheduled to be ready August 2021.

Tena Walls, CTE department chairperson, said the new building will house mainly the Health Science programs and a few new mechatronics classes. The robotics classes may utilize the space as well.

"Mechatronics is a combination of robotics, electronics, and instrumentation along with many other components," Walls said.

Catherine Teel, College and Career counselor, said Health Science classes receive Continuing Education Credit through Del Mar.

"Continuing Ed classes allow students to gain knowledge in a particular field and possibly obtain a certification upon passing an exam," she said. "The credits are not transferable to other colleges, but the certifications are usually state/nationally recognized."

Walls said a special floor will be built for the mechatronics equipment because the robots are massive and weigh more than normal.

"If students are interested in mechatronics, they can start by taking Mr. Turner's robotics classes as an introduction and then traverse into that program," she said. "Students interested in the health science classes need to sign up for one of the four available to choose from: Phlebotomy, EKG, Patient Care Tech, and Certified Nursing Assistant."

Walls said GP wants to make as many options available to students as possible.

"GP High School and Administration wants to give students every opportunity to be successful in all different facets of life," Walls said "This is a perfect example of giving to our students."

Students who want to learn a trade coupled with high technology and a high paying job will have these programs as a good avenue, Walls said.

"Students can get certified and start careers right after high school and earn a great living without college expenses, or the students can get a jump start on a college education," she said.

Walls said the building should be open for classes next year.

"It is going to be beautiful and beneficial for our students," she said.

YEARBOOKS

Yearbooks can now be purchased online by going to commpe.pictavo.com.

While there, you can take advantage of multi-book specials as well as purchase books from 2018, 2019 and 2020. These books are currently in stock and can be picked up on campus after purchase is made by contacting rploch@g-pisd.org.

In addition, you can order the 2021 yearbook with or without personalization.

Contact rploch@g-pisd.org for more information.

ASVAB, AP Exam, PSAT/ NMSQT, SAT, ACT, and TSI Testing Information

Students who registered for the ASVAB will need to report to the GP High School campus cafeteria on Sept. 23, 2020, at 8 a.m. If you are attending the "Virtual (Online) Academy" at home, on the day of the ASVAB administration you will need to report to campus and enter the building at the student entrance. Doors open at 7:30 a.m. Students are required to check in using "Dr. Owl" on their cell phone, or they will be screened at the door entrance for COVID-19 symptoms. All students are always expected to wear a face mask or covering. Hand sanitizer is available at building entrances, common areas and other high traffic locations.

Next, this is a reminder that GP High School AP students who are interested in taking an Advanced Placement exam this school year need to complete AP exam registration by/before the deadline of Friday, October 9, 2020. AP exam registration is not completed until the online payment for the exam or exams has been made, AND the student has submitted their AP Exam Registration form to the Guidance Office via email at ytrevino@g-pisd.org. Please refer to the AP Exam Registration form and the "How-To" for making an online testing payment that are included in this newsletter.

This is the last reminder that registration has begun for the Preliminary S.A.T. / National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test, also known as the PSAT/NMSQT, which is recommended for 10th and 11th grade students. However, it is available to 9th grade, 10th grade, and 11th grade students who want to take the PSAT/NMSQT. Registration will end on October 2, 2020. The PSAT/NMSQT will be administered on October 14, 2020, on the GP High School campus starting promptly at 8 a.m. The testing fee is $20 and must be paid online at the GPISD website before a student's registration is complete. Students can email Mrs. Trevino, Counseling Dept. Secretary, at ytrevino@g-pisd.org with your registration information (First & Last Name, Student I.D. #, and your current grade level).

For information about other exams and testing such as the SAT, ACT, Credit by Exam, TSI, please go to the G-PISD website at <https://www.g-pisd.org/departments-services/testing> or on the G-P High School website at <https://www.g-pisd.org/gphs/campus-info/counselors-scholarships/testing>.

Creative Writing

by Donald Nutting

This is Creative Writing's first year at our school. This is a unique course that offers both writing skills for fiction as well as a class devoted to writing scholarships.

We kicked off the year writing Flash Fiction, which is the hardest genre of the short story to create. Everything is condensed and packed into 50 to 1000 word stories! Character. Conflict. Bang. Boom! Go! End. Few can do it, and even fewer can master it. Why start with Flash Fiction? Scholarship writing is condensed too, and this skill is one of many offered in the course.

I am lucky to have an entire class of talented writers with bright minds. I've read their stories that range from cosmic horror to babysitting comedy to Corgi war mounts for the Fey, and even Minoan time travel!

Today we are sharing a fictional story that hits close to home for our community: Hurricanes. I hope you enjoy reading "The Storm" by Andrea Rosenbaum.

The STORM by Andrea Rosenbaum

Arial stared out the window, taking in the sight of grey skies and bland houses. Almost everyone evacuated, leaving her alone, not that she's not used to it by now... It was peaceful in a "calm before the storm" type of way. There were no judgmental stares, barking dogs, or roaring engines; it was just silent. She faintly remembered the original weather broadcast, "The tropical storm is expected to form into a category 5 hurricane once it hits land..." Her lips curled into a humorless smile at the thought as she moved throughout the empty house. She lived alone by default, having been kicked out of her family home after sharing some "artistic" differences. She secluded herself from them by choice, denying how the loneliness left an aching hole in her chest. The wind began to pick up and she glanced out of the closest window. The tree branches thrashed back and forth, inching toward the unoccupied house across the street.

She moved away from the window, entering her storage room to gather candles and other essentials. Then she descended to her storm cellar. The image of a cellar occupied by a joyous family filled her head, but soon, it morphed into her parents looking down at her from the crumbling stairs, disappointment consuming their features. Despondent, she downcast her eyes. "No. that's all in the past," she deflected as another morbid thought crossed her mind, "It's not like they care about me anyway."

She heard the pattering droplets transition into something angrier, like the rain was attempting to stomp straight through the roof as the foundation itself creaked against the shrieking wind. She exited the safehold to hastily search for matches before the roof decided to separate from the house. All the while, contemplations of her family battling the storm plagued her mind; she pushed down the urge to contact them. The shrieking wind morphed into a distorted and thunderous gust that rammed part of a tree through Arial's window, sending glass in all directions. She quickly grabbed the matches and rushed toward the cellar. She plopped on the preset cot, staring longingly at the blank wall illuminated by newly lit candles, and reluctantly pulled out her phone, staring conflictedly at the contacts. She sighed in frustration and put her phone aside, laying back on the cot and drifting into a fitful slumber.

She awoke in an empty field that was illuminated by a single light. The light itself radiated warmth that filled her soul. It seemed to beckon her, trying to give her purpose to stay. Arial approached it, extended arms jolting as a blaring siren sounded in all directions, the light dreadfully flickering as tremors ran through it. Arial's heart dropped, and she dashed to embrace it before it abandoned her in this desolate wasteland. The ground shook with thunderous explosions, knocking her to her knees, the light growing dimmer and dimmer as she was being dragged from the only hope left in her life. She desperately reached out, only for another siren to erupt, sending gallons upon gallons of water to pour above Arial, violently thrashing her against raising waves. Water filled her lungs, she was choking; she was drowning! The light was now a star in the dark of the midnight sky. Blurred by watery sight, Arial awoke with a strangled gasp, clawing at her throat for any fragment of air, as exploding thunder rumbled the earth.

She inhaled large gulps of air, grounding herself on the ear aching static of the rain, and after a few agonizing minutes, the panic subsided. Through the aggressively hissing participation, she could hear a muffled ringing. A dim light illuminated from her phone, and it only took her a second until she frantically snatched it, clinging to it with all her might.

The display was of a familiar contact but stung like a wasp attacking her stomach while she debated whether to answer. Finally, she did, and a voice she hadn't heard in a year called out desperately, "Arial? Arial?! Are you there? Please answer..." It was her mother's breaking voice. She didn't respond for what felt like an eternity, then hesitantly replied "yes?" The storm raged on mauling everything in its path. Her mother became elated, "Thank goodness, we've been so worried." Arial's heart fluttered, "You have?" she hesitantly asked, biting back hope. "Yes! We've been trying to contact you for hours."

Tears streamed down her cheeks and Arial smiled, allowing herself to hope for just a moment, "I'm ok mom." After hours of waiting out the hurricane, she went outside. Everything was destroyed, but there was a glimmer of sunlight protruding through the clouds, which shined upon Arial's form.
